1 homme : manager + 1 femme jeune : the candidate (accents américains)

Manager: Good morning, Miss...

The candidate: My name is Hannah Collins.

Manager: So, Miss Collins, how old are you exactly?

The candidate: I'm eighteen, nearly nineteen.

Manager: Have you finished school?

The candidate: Yes, I left High School two months ago.

Manager: Is this the first time you've applied for a job?

The candidate: For a full-time job, yes, but I have already worked part-time. I did a work placement at Macy's in Manhattan. I worked in the kids' clothing department and I've done lots of summer jobs since I was fifteen. I have walked dogs and done baby-sitting. But this job of salesperson at the Men's Store is a great opportunity for me. I have always wanted to work at Saks on Fifth Avenue.

Manager: You know, we don't really need people with a lot of experience. We are looking for talented, energetic, creative young people with exceptional communication skills. You will have to be organized and of course patient with our customers.

The candidate: I see. Will I have to work late evenings and weekends?

Manager: Yes, there are special late evening openings, during the Christmas season for example, and you should also be ready to work some weekends.

The candidate: All right! I live in Brooklyn, so this won't be a problem.

Manager: Well, Miss Collins, we will let you know in due time if you are the person we are looking for. There are other applicants I must also interview but I can already tell you that you are among the first on my list.

The candidate: Thank you. Good bye!

Manager: Good bye!
